DRUMMOND HILL

Drummond Hill

An outstanding Victorian manor house with superb character, situated within the expansive grounds of the Drummond Hill estate, in the Highland capital of Inverness, featuring beautifully landscaped gardens, a tree lined avenue and mature woodlands.

The imposing Victorian mansion house was originally constructed in the late 19th Century in 1886 for the local Inverness solicitor William Burns and his wife, where a marriage stone sits above the main entrance door. It is thought the house was designed by the prominent Inverness Architect, Alexander Ross.

The mansion house, together with the original charming gatehouse are Category B listed buildings.

Drummond Hill is an exceptional estate, comprising the sympathetic conversion of the stately home into six unique apartments, retaining the splendour of the property's many period features, including imposing fireplaces, ornate cornicing, oak panelling and the grandeur of the original oak staircase.

Inverness Castle, a stunning fortress near Drummond Hill, offers breathtaking views over the city.
